Matt Robinson just got dumped. Again. With his sister's wedding on the horizon, he needs a plus-one.

Kieran Barker has been in love with his straight best friend for far too long. It'll never happen. Having already been left behind when Matt went to university, Kieran can't take more heartbreak.

So when Matt invites Kieran to spend a whole week with him on the island of Majorca, Kieran can't let himself think there's more to it than lads on tour. All he can do is play the field to take his mind off the hot, rugby-honed body of his oldest mate. Sexy men are in abundance in Magaluf, right? Matt only wants to cop off with the bridesmaid anyway.

But when Matt's overprotectiveness about Kieran's late-night escapades borders on jealousy, can he even dare to think that there's more to their years of flirtations than simple bromance?

And can Matt really acknowledge his feelings when they'll soon be returning to England, with him back to the university rugby team and 200 miles away from Kiera?

Spanish Siesta (Flying into Love, Book 2) is a contemporary friends-to-lovers, bisexual-awakening, forced-proximity MM romance featuring a hotheaded rugby fly-half struggling with his emotions and an out-and-proud wannabe dancer suffering from unrequited love.
